SITUATION SUMMARY

MEDICAL AND HEALTH COORDINATION CENTER ACTIVATED IN RESPONSE TO THE EBOLA

- The California Department of Public Health (CDPH) and Emergency Medical Services Authority (EMSA) activated the Medical and Health Coordination Center (MHCC) at Level 1 in response to Ebola on 10/08/2014 at 1000 hours. While there is no case of Ebola currently in California and the public health risk of contracting Ebola is low, the MHCC is activated to support Ebola preparedness and readiness of California's healthcare providers, local health departments and public health laboratories.
- The Richmond Campus Coordination Center (RCCC) will be activated for technical and subject matter support for response. The MHCC will support the RCCC and provide information sharing and coordination of other CDPH programs active in the response, including Licensing and Certification and the Environmental Management Branch. It is anticipated that this Level 1 (low-level) activation will provide the current needed coordination; however, the situation will be monitored and response scaled to meet the evolving situation.
- The MHCC will be open Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. until further notice.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

High pressure has dropped back to medium strength over California in the past couple of days. This has led to some cooling most areas, minor humidity increases inland, and to a renewed (but rather shallow) coastal marine layer. The high weakens slightly more before getting to its weakest point late Thursday. An already weak Pacific cold front will lose momentum and dissipate over the north end of California Thursday night. After that, high pressure aloft quickly rebounds Friday into Saturday night, becoming rather strong by early Sunday. It brings renewed warming and drying to all of northern California. Surface pressure gradients tighten up late Saturday, and Sunday could see light to moderate north-northwest to east-northeast (foehn type) winds over primarily the north half of northern California. Confidence is growing that northern California will see a significant change in the larger-scale governing weather pattern next week. A strong and moist westerly Pacific jet stream from the Gulf of Alaska will be dropping farther south along the West Coast. This will lead to an initial weather system bringing cooling northern California-wide Monday, and precipitation to probably at least the northwest quarter of the area Monday p.m. into early Tuesday. One to two deeper and wetter storms could then affect most, if not all, of Northern California by the October 17-19 weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Some subtropical moisture will skirt past the far southeastern corner of the state today, but most of the area will continue to see partly to mostly sunny skies and above normal temperatures. Isolated thunderstorms will be possible near the Arizona border, but the vast majority of the storms will remain to our south and east. A bit of afternoon instability may allow for some flat cumulus buildups near the Sierra Crest and the higher mountains of southern California. Temperatures today, while a couple of degrees cooler than yesterday, will still be above normal with highs in the 90s in the valleys to the 70s along the coast and in the mountains. Winds will be light today through Friday with local terrain driving diurnal upslope and downslope winds less than 10 mph. Minimum relative humidity readings will reach the 12-15% range in areas below 6,000 today through Friday, but relative humidity recovery should be good the next few nights. Thursday will likely be the coolest day of the week with temperatures 3-5 degrees cooler over most regions. Friday into the weekend, a large high pressure ridge will build off the central California coast. This will lead to warmer and drier conditions over the weekend. Temperatures will likely be close to 100 degrees Saturday and Sunday in the valleys and lower foothills with much of the central part of the state seeing minimum relative humidity return to the single digits. Local north winds may occur during the night and morning hours in Santa Barbara County and the I-5 Corridor, but at this time, wind speeds are expected to be light. Cooler weather may return during the middle to latter portions of next week.
